Every tinkle on the shingles
Has an echo in the heart,
And a thousand dreamy fancies
Into busy being start, Into busy being start,
As I listen to the patter
Of the rain upon the roof.

Now in mem'ry comes my mother
As she used, long years agone,
To regard the darling dreamers
Ere she left them till the dawn.
Oh! I see her loaning o'er me,
As I list to this refrain
Which is played upon the shingles
By the patter of the rain.

Then my little seraph sister,
With her wings and waving hair,
And her star-eyed cherub brother—
A sweet angelic pair—
Glide around my wakeful pillow,
With their praise of mild reproof,
As I listen to the murmur
Of the soft rain on the roof.

And another comes to thrill me With her eyes' delicious blue; And I mind not, musing on her, That her heart was all untrue; I remember but to love her, With a passion kin to pain, And my heart's quick pulses vibrate To the patter of the rain.

Art hath naught of tone or cadence That an work with such a spell In the souls mysterious fountains, Whence the tears of rapture well, As that melody of nature, That subdued, subduing strain, Which is played upon the shingles By the patter of the rain.

THE TIMELY WARNING.

A THRILLING STORY.

My father, after an absence of three years returned to the house so dear to him. He had made his last voyage, and rejoiced to have reached a haven of rest from the perils of the sea. During him absence I had grown from a child and baby of my had grown from a child and baby of my mother's—for I was her youngest—into a rough, careless, and head strong boy. Her gentle voice no longer restrained me. I was often wilful, and sometimes disobedient. I thought it indicated manly superiority to be independent of a woman's influence. My father's return was a fortunate circumstance for me. He scop perceived the spirit of insubordination stirring within me. I saw by standing sullenly beside her.

My mother, being feeeble in health, sat down and beckened me beside her. Her look, so full of sorrow, is present to me now. I would not sit, but continued standing sullenly beside her.

"Alfred, my dear son," said she, "have you lost all love for your mother?" I did not reply. "I fear you have," she continued; "and may God help you to see your own heart, and me to do my duty." She then taiked to me of my misdeeds—of the dreadful consequences of the course I was pursuing. By tears, and entreaties, and prayers, she tried to make an it; cession on me. She placed before me the lives and examples of great and good men; she sought to stimulate my ambition. I was moved, but too proud to show it, and remained standing in degged silence beside her. I thought, "What will my companions say, if, after all my boasting, I should yield at last, and submit to be led by a woman?"

What agony was visible on my mother's face when she saw that all she said and suffered failed to move me. She rose to go home, and I followed at a distance. She spoke no more to me till we reached our own docr.

"It is achoel-time now," said she. "Go, my son, and once more let me be seech you to think upon what I have said."

"I shan't go to school," said I.
She looked astonished at my boldness, but replied firmly, "Certainly you will go, Alfred; I command you."
"I will not," said I, with a tone of de-

— It is now estimated that the forests of America will be all used up at the end of another thirty years, and a man

"Then follow me," taid she, as she grasped my arm firmly. I raised my foot—O, any son, hear me—I raised my foot and kicked her—my sainted mother!
How my head reels as the torrent of memory rushes over me! I kicked my mother—a feeble woman—ray mother!
She steggered hack a few steps and County jail last night, but will be allowed mother—a feeble woman—my mother!
She staggered back a few steps and leaned against the wall. She did not look at me. I saw her heart beat against her breast. "O, Heavenly Father," she cried, "forgive him; he knows not what he does." The gardener just then passed the door, and seeing my mother pale and almost unable to support in reself, he stopped; she beckoned him in. "Take this boy up stairs and lock him in his room," said she, and turned from me. Looking back, as she gave me such the convicts were making plans to escape, and in pursuing his investigations into that matter, caused one of the white prisoners to secret himself under the bed of one of these convicts came in and While there other convicts came in and

I made no reply to this. My feelings were touched, but I still resisted their influence. My sister called me, but I would not answer. I heard her footsteps years.

Though the boy who reads this may not have kicked his mother, yet let him think if he has never given his mother or father some unkind words, or been disobedient to their wishes in many ways. Boys, beware I obey your parents in all things, for God his commanded it; and remember that disobedience to your parents is sin against God!

Guano Fun.—The Hawkinsville, Ga., Dispaich tells the following anecdotes:

"Some days since a guano agent in Hawkinsville courted' a farmer for his guano trade. The farmer finally decided to purchase a load, and driving to the warehouse, loaded his wagon with the "precious stuff" and drove home. After the farmer had left town the guano agent learned that his customer had failed for several seasous past to copy to time on learned that his customer had failed for several seasons past to come to time on guano notes, and the agent immediately matured plans to induce the farmer to haul the guano back. He wrote the farmer a very polite note, stating that he (the farmer) had received the wrong brand of guano, sud requesting him to return the load and get the 'particular brand' he wanted. The farmer brought his load back, and after unloading it, he was politely informed that the 'particular brand' he desired had not arrived. Further comment in regard to this transaction is unnecessary."

And still another: "A farmer called at one of our warehouses the other day for

And still another: "A farmer called at one of our warehouses the other day for a load of guano, and while loading his wagon, it was observed that he was very particular about selecting the sacks containing it—picking the most serviceable sack. When questioned about the matter, he replied: 'Oh, I only use the stuff because it is fashionable, and as the sacks is about all I make by using it, I want good ones.'"

"I dare you to do it," said I; "you cra't get me up stairs."

"Afred, choose now," said my mother, as she laid her hand on my arm. She

"Take this boy up stairs and lock him in his room," said she, and turned from me. Looking back, as she gave me such a look—it will forever follow me. It was a look of agony, mingled with the intensest loye—it was the last unutterable pang from a heart that was broken.

It a moment I foundmyself a prisoner in my own room. I thought for a moment I could fling myself from the window, and dash my brains out, but I felt afraid to die. I was not penitent. At times my heart was subdued, but my stubborn pride rose instantly and bade me not to yield. The pale face of my mother at that was broken and fell asleep. I woke at midnight, stiffened and terrified with frightful dreams.

I would have sought my mother at that moment for I trenthled with fear but. stiffened and terrified with frightful dreams.

I would have sought my mother at that moment, for I trembled with fear, but my door was fast. With the day ight my terrors were dismissed, and I became bold in resisting all good impulses. The servant brought my meals, but I did not tast them. I thought the day would never end. Just at twilight I heard a light footstepaproach my door. It was my sister who called me by name.

"What may I tell mother from you?" she asked.

It was my sister who called me by name.

"What may I tell mother from you?" she asked.

"Nothing!" I replied.

"O, Alfred, for my sake and all our sakes, say that you are sorry. She longs to forgive you."

"I won't be driven to school against my will," I said.

"But you will go if she wishes it, dear Alfred," said my sister, pleadingly.

"No, I won't," said I, "and you needn't say a word more about it."

"O, brother, you will kill her, a.d then you can never have a happy moment."

I made no reply to this. My feeling the convict, particularly implicated. The convict, particularly implicated and his sentence is from Chesterfield and his sentence is for murder. Rodgers is from Greenville, and his sentence was for two years, for larceny, and he has about six months yet to serve.

The dies were made of plaster of paris. Two dies were captured, one being a dollar die and one being a quarter of a dollar die. The latter Colonel Lipscomb thinks has not been used. A third die was thrown into the canal by one of the convicts, and for this, search will be made.—Columbia Register, 24th ult.

A LATE DISCHARGE.—While Mr. Bunk McGhee, who lives near Smyrna, on the line of the State road, and immediately in the track of the armies as they fell back on Atlants, was burning off a new ground the other evening, the citizens were alarmed at the explosion of an old bombshell. A letter from there says while he was thus engaged he piled up brush on an old stump, and in his rounds of chunking up, and while in the act of mending the fire on the stump, a large shell, which was concealed in the stump, exploded, sending smouldering fire and ashes and fragments of shell in every direction, producing a "lie-down" effect upon every one who heard it, as well as upon Mr. McGhee, who, fortunately, was the only sufferer. Though he escaped injury from the flying fragments of shell, yet he sustained very serious injuries from the hot embers and flames, burning him all over one side of the face, neck and hands, from which his sufferings were great.—Augusta Evening News.

GERMAN CARP IN GEORGIA .-- Hon. J. T. Henderson, Commissioner of Agriculture, furnishes the following extract of a letter from a gentleman near Griffin, Georgia, who has taken great interest in Georgia, who has taken great interest in the propagation of the German carp in Georgia:

"GRIFFIN, GA., April 22, 1881.—Hon. J. T. Henderson, Commissioner of Agriculture—DEAR SIR: The carp have laid and hatched. Millions of little ones swarm in my pond. I noticed them on 12th of this month spawning, and saw their eggs on the grass and meshes this morning. I happened to look in the water and saw millions of them. They are in droves or schools from one end of the dam to the other for four hundred feet, and yet there are countless numbers the dam to the other for four hundred feet, and yet there are countless numbers of eggs yet to hatch, and still they are spawning. I notice that they lay early in the morning, and stop when the sun is up—good. Please accept my heartfelt gratitude. Very truly, ABEL WRIGHT."

Penny, Houston Co., Ga., Jan. 25, 1880.

In the year 1873, there were two negro prisoners confined in the jail of this county, who were very badly afflicted with that loathsome disease Syphilis. In my official capacity as Ordinary, I employed Capt. C. T. Swift, then a resident of this place, to cure them, under a contract, "no cure, no pay." He administered to them his celebrated Syphilitic Specific, and in a few weeks I felt bound, under my contract, to pay him out of the county treasury, as he had effected a complete and radical cure.

In testimony I hereunto set my official signature and scal.
